Gordon E. Owen and sister, Mrs. L. B. Lord, and son of South Barre have returned from a two weeks' visit at the home of their brother, E. T. Owen, in Montgomery Center. Mr. Owen brought back a 180-pound doe, which he killed within ten minutes after his brother, E. T. Owen, shot a doe. Both weighed about the same.

"Under the Old Apple Tree." The peddler, burdened with his pack, trudging along, weary and footsore, holding his little motherless child by the hand, stops under a shading tree and bids the little girl, who is no less tired than himself, to sit under the tree while he tries to dispose of his goods, and he will return for her in a short time. The child falls asleep. The father, in crossing a roadway, is struck by an automobile and taken to a hospital unconscious. The little girl awakens from her nap, and when she finds herself alone begins to cry and starts running in a frightened daze, calling for her father. At the Dreamland to-day. Don't miss it.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Gasparini.
